Guest Columnist Foster Grandparent Program is Rewarding

BY GOVERNOR MARIO CUOMO

Growing old can sometimes be lonely and unrewarding. Being a foster child may not be any easier. In New York State, we are bringing the two together to create a new warmth in hearts where isolation once existed.

The Foster Grandparent Program, enables persons age 60 and older to volunteer their time and experience to the community. These opportunities allow seniors to render supportive services to children who have special or exceptional needs, many of whom are deprived substantial relationships with adults.

Foster Grandparents work with children in a variety of settings throughout New York State: institutions and schools for the physically, mentally, or emotionally disabled; pediatric wards of hospitals and nursing homes; correctional facilities and day care centers. The program creates the possibility for each volunteer to meet with two to four children on a regular basis which encourages them to establish a special, close friendship.

The relationships developed between our foster grandparents and the foster children have proven to be very rewarding for both. Volunteer work stations provide the children with the individual attention they deserve and the senior volunteers are compensated for their efforts in numerous ways.

In return for the time and energy donated, the Foster Grandparent Program offers training, meals, transportation, physicals, uniforms, and a stipend. The funding level for the program is figured at an average cost of $3,700 per volunteer, but the true benefits of this opportunity for meaningful interaction outweigh any monetary sum.

There is no greater reward than the feeling grandparents gain from sharing themselves with children who genuinely appreciate their efforts. The foster children are this appreciative audience and they provide their older friends with a powerful sense of accomplishment and satisfaction. The knowledge that they are playing an important role in the lives of these children who have special needs is the most significant form of compensation available for seniors.

This meaningful opportunity to provide an invaluable service, and participate in a program which has such a positive influence on society, helps the Foster Grandparents as well as the children of New York. Through the Foster Grandparents Program, two important segments of the Family of New York are brought together in a mutually beneficial relationship.

If you are interested in becoming a Foster Grandparent write to: Foster Grandparent Program, Livingston County Coalition of Churches Inc. Building One, Mt. Morris, 14510—or call: 658-2944.

Make the choice to help a child who may be deprived of some of the most important necessities in life: love, care, and attention.
